WRIGHT-PATTERSON AIR FORCE BASE, Ohio — Another successful quarter was recognized on May 6 at the Air Force Research Laboratory's Headquarters fourth quarter awards ceremony. AFRL Commander Maj. Gen. Paul Nielsen announced the honorees.

Maj. Brad L. Beatty won employee of the quarter for work performed prior to his promotion from Captain. He was acknowledged for his service as the executive officer to AFRL's vice commander. He was recognized for performing "above and beyond" all expectations, as he cleared nearly 150 backlogged military decorations. He was the only person trusted to perform as Detachment 1's Acting Section Commander during the holiday leave period and actively mentored headquarters-assigned company grade officers.

Lois J. Bullock was recognized as the administrative employee of the quarter for her critical support to the Plans and Programs Directorate during its major reorganization. Ms. Bullock independently developed a comprehensive and detailed data base of every manpower position in the directorate in preparation for major movements and changes. She developed the complex and comprehensive organizational change request packages, the document required to make major organizational changes in both mission and manpower. After completing the package, she continually worked it through the coordination and approval process at the highest level of the laboratory.

The Enterprise Business System Technology Directorate Level Planning and Programming Vendor Selection Team was the recipient for the headquarters team of the quarter. The vendor selection team executed a streamlined acquisition and contracting process, marking a crucial phase in the EBS evolution. The team helped to fully prepare potential vendors in an Industry Ray Open Forum, leading to high-quality and competitive proposals.

"We can never provide enough recognition for the great initiative and dedication our men and women demonstrate every day," General Nielsen said. "Throughout AFRL, professionals in every career field give us their best. I'm proud to be able to recognize these members of our team today as representatives of our outstanding work force." @
